| Viticulture and Vinification |

The Cabernet grapes are harvested late in the season, because their variety ripens late naturally. For this reason, the grapes are harvested during the day and end up in the cellar at a suitable temperature for the fermentation to start immediately. The fermentation in the presence of skins takes less than a week and the grapes are pressed with a certain amount of residual sugar, which is then completely consumed in the absence of skins in order to produce a dry wine.

| Tasting Notes |

Intense ruby red with violet reflexions, good limpidity. Intense aromas of red and black fruit (currants, grafted cherries, blackberries), light vegetable semblance. Light attack and body, very friendly tannins, finish with hints of almond.
